Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Method of Destroying or Preventing the Growth of Algae and Certain Pathogenic Bacteria in Water Supplies The necessity of finding some cheap and practical method of preventing or removing algal contamination of cress beds first led this Office to undertake the investigations described in this bulletin. The success of the first experiments in 1901 was so marked that it seemed wise to extend the work, and authority was, therefore, granted by Congress to study and find methods for preventing the algal and other contaminations of water supplies. The progress of the investigation has been noted from time to time in the annual reports of the Bureau. Though the work is not yet completed, we have been urged to publish the results already obtained for the consideration of boards of health and officers in charge of public water supplies. Doctor Moore and Mr. Kellerman have shown that it is entirely practicable to cheaply and quickly destroy objectionable algae in small lakes, ponds, storage reservoirs, and other similar bodies of water by the use of extremely dilute solutions of copper sulphate or of metallic copper. The fact that an extremely dilute solution (one to one hundred thousand) will also destroy the most virulent typhoid and cholera bacteria at ordinary temperatures in three hours is of great importance and significance. Solutions of copper as dilute as this are not considered injurious to man or other animals. The value of copper, especially colloidal, in preventing or treating typhoid and other related diseases should be carefully investigated by competent pathologists. We desire it distinctly understood that, so far as bacterial contamination of water is concerned, the methods here proposed are...
